The Adventure of Naoki and the Bear

In the year 2200, the Earth was very different. The cities were taller, the skies were clearer, and animals could talk. Naoki, a curious boy, loved to ride his shiny blue bicycle every day. One sunny morning, while riding near the library, he met a talking bear named Edo.

“Wow, you’re pretty smart for a bear,” said Naoki.

“Thank you! I spend a lot of time reading books in the library,” replied Edo with a smile.

Edo and Naoki became friends quickly. Naoki told Edo about his dream to explore the mountains. Edo said, “I know a samurai who lives there. He is braver than anyone I know, and he loves bananas!”

The two friends decided to visit the samurai. They rode Naoki’s bicycle together, though it was slower with Edo on the back. “This bike is faster than walking but slower than flying,” joked Edo. After a long ride, they reached the mountains and met the samurai.

The samurai welcomed them warmly. He was tall, strong, and kind. “The mountains are the most beautiful place on Earth,” he said. He showed them a hidden waterfall and shared bananas from his garden. Naoki thought, “This is even more amazing than I imagined!”

As the sun set, Naoki and Edo said goodbye to the samurai and promised to return. Their adventure had just begun, and Naoki felt happier than ever.
